

Committee: UNHCR

Topic: Ensuring the eradication of human trafficking of war refugees.

Chair: Ana Cecilia Fajardo Cepeda

Moderator: Emilio Andrés Barreda

The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and his office (UNHCR) was established by the United Nations General Assembly (GA). This committee contributes to humanitarian assistance and protection, takes responsibility of its refugees and the help it gives to the people in need. Always trying to look for permanent solutions, these committee is focused on the refugees and the responsibilities the people living there would need. We are in charge of all of the people outside their country of origin and offer protection because they might be suffering of persecution, experimenting with any kind of violence, and as a result they require international protection.

Ensuring the eradication of human trafficking of war refugees, UNHCR is aware of the problem of human trafficking and that people is constantly moving to seek or escape the authorities of the state, our committee is engaged with the idea that having the government of the countries involved and international organizations this can decrease, because people have been trafficked in international borders. Human trafficking in wars has been increasing highly and the traffickers take advantage of the armed conflicts, and the people living in these conflicts are completely exposed and affected by any kind of abuse in these conflicts. Trafficking people is one of the worst things you can do to a human being because you are taking away their freedom.

Human trafficking has been happening since the earliest 1400s. However one of the most noticeable and known cases is the one from Africa where 12 millions of Africans were taken and shipped to America according to a database where they were taken to do hard work without any payment at all. Another remarkable case was after both World Wars where people were taken and this was an increase in human trafficking and in the war refugees.

Nowadays Syria that is in war has an impact of human trafficking and trafficking in persons, and they do have a trafficking crisis they have studies where they investigate the situations of vulnerability and cases of actual trafficking cases they analyzed each case and found out the form and usually is a cross border country or place. They have a project going on that is called "Assessment of the Impact of the Syrian War and Refugee Crisis on Trafficking in Persons (AIS-TIP)," and it was created by the International Center of Migration, this study was made in December 2015.

The migration crisis is clearly being used by human trafficking networks to target and brutally exploit the most vulnerable. There is need for urgent action to protect these people." Kevin Hyland, OBE

The United Nations has different committees where they come all together to investigate the problem of human trafficking and to take charge of the refugees such as UNHCR where the refugees in wars is up to us and finding a viable solution all together and with the help of different committees such as UNODC that focuses on criminal justice to investigate the people.

Human trafficking is a compound topic in wars where they don't have a stable government and everyone is trying to live for their own literally and people run out of money and they found out these activities to get the profit fast and that's why it does make the refugees so vulnerable. Nowadays foundations have been trying to reduce the human trafficking where it's now called modern slavery like forced work hours and children slavery too where they don't get paid any extra for working more or in the children's case they don't care about the age of the little one.

Some solutions we could take care of are:

- Having more of our own refugees in the wars like Syria
- Make an agreement with more committees that could help us investigate deeply about the traffickers and take care of it since the problem started and combat it.
- Punish the traffickers because they are violating, taking the freedom away from another person, and being against human rights.
- Have more refugees in the countries that have a war going on.
- Have more security that takes care of the people and if they see a trafficking punish it.
- Get more committees from the United Nations involved

Stop The Traffik is an organization that help human trafficking in the refugees, where they know about the vulnerable refugees in the war, they document and take care of the people in their refugees and give them a good treatment, they do try to make agreements with the government so they keep in track of the people and they don't get involved in the human trafficking or taken by the people involved in that problem.
